Handwritten text in a cursive script, likely Persian or Urdu, spanning the bottom half of the image. This section continues the text from the top strip. It also features two large, dark circular marks, similar to the ones in the top strip. The script is consistent with the top section, showing a continuous flow of writing. The text is written on a similar light-colored, aged paper strip, and the overall appearance suggests a single document or a closely related set of notes.

The first part of the paper is devoted to a discussion of the various methods of determining the rate of reaction. The most common method is the use of a clock reaction, in which the reaction is allowed to proceed for a certain time and then the reaction is stopped by the addition of a substance which reacts with one of the products. The amount of the product which reacts is then determined by titration.
